“When people think about California's water infrastructure, they often picture large reservoirs, aqueducts, and major urban water systems. But across the state, small rural systems play an equally important role in providing safe, reliable water to the communities they serve.

CCWD's Sheep Ranch Water System is a reminder that water reliability is not just a statewide issue – it's a local one. From remote communities in Calaveras County to major metropolitan areas, every Californian depends on resilient water infrastructure.”
